

Adults just don't get it !

Are you in junior high (grades 7 - 9)?

Do you experience disability, or challenges with learning, communicating, or getting around?

We need your help! We are looking for young people who experience disability to help us with a research project

When adults watch kids and young people, or listen-in to their conversations, they can have a hard time understanding what's going on. For adults, it sometimes seems like young people live in a unique world and speak a language all of their own. We need your help to learn about the worlds created by young people. For us, as the researchers, it will be like going on a tour of a far off place. We need you to be our tour guide, to show us the sights, and to help us understand what we are seeing.

What is involved?

- You will be part of a small 'working group', with some other young people, to help us come up with tools for exploring these worlds.
- A researcher will then meet with you one-on-one, and using the tools that the working group came up with, ask you to give them a tour of the worlds you have created for your self and/or with your peers.

If you have any questions, or would like to participate, please contact Shanon Phelan at 780-492-9040 (email sphelan@ualberta.ca), or Kassi Boyd at 780-222-8076 (email boyd@ualberta.ca)